LEE COUNTY AGRICULTURE

Agriculture in Lee County is big business. The 1,800 farm operators annually market over $40,000,000 in farm products. Of this total over $26,000,000 is from livestock and livestock products. Well over $14,000,000 comes from grain and crop marketings.

In the last 10 years the prices which farmers receive for their products have gone down. The costs of the things they buy have gone up. Only through efficient operation can farmers continue to stay in business.

The successful farmer today must fit all parts of the farm business -- capital, labor, management, cropping system and livestock -- together to combine these factors advantageously to produce maximum income.

Technological changes are occurring more rapidly than ever before.

Consequently the farmer of today must constantly re-educate himself.. to keep pace with modern developments. The Agriculture Extension Service of the University of Illinois provides an educational program to help the farmer meet the constant cost-price squeeze under which he operates.

The adult and 4-H educational programs in agruculture and home economics of the Agricultural Extension Service help farm families to make a larger income -- to enjoy a better standard of living -- to enjoy the art of living -- to take their place as responsible community leaders -- and to exercise their citizenship responsibilities more effectively.

This educational program has resulted in a constant increase in the volume of business per operator, and increase in size and a reduction in the number of farms, higher capitalization, more use of credit and QUALITY FOOD AND FIBER AT LESS COST TO THE CONSUMER.
